Why are Massenet and Puccini the operatic leaders of the day? Simply because they compose their music with reference to a heroine. The French composer builds his lyric structure on the career of a Manon, a Charlotte or a Thais; the Italian composer, on the destinies of any well established female character in novel or drama, now a girl of the Paris Latin quarter, now one living in a Japanese port where American ships call, now one dwelling in the Rocky mountain gold diggings. ## PAVING THE WAY FOR PEACE

What Texas Has Done to Prepare for Baron d'Estournelles de Constant.

In view of the interest and significance of the American'tour of Baron d'Estournelles de Constant, to all who are following the cause of world peace, The Christian Science Monitor has arranged to offer to its readers brief reviews of the peace movement in the various sections where the baron will be a visitor. Today's paper deals with the work in Texas.

Design adapted also to dainty materials.

WITH the warmer days drawing near, the busy mother is interested in new and pretty designs for cool and comfortable dresses. The illustration, Ladies Home Journal pattern No. 5338, is a simple design cut in one piece, with a seam at the underarm and closing at the centerback. The body of the dress is gathered to a shaped band, and an extension of the sleeve may be turned back and stitched in cuff effect. If small straps are sewed at the underarm seam, a patent leather belt might be worn with the dress, but for a small girl the belt-could be omitted, and the dress left loose from the shoulders.

Dimity, batiste, challis or cotton marquisette are pretty materials for making this dress, and for the shaped band at the neck, and for the cuff extensions a pretty all-over eyelet embroidery could be used. If a play dress is desired, chambray, cotton repp, poplin or percale could be used, and for trimming, the belt, shaped band and sleeve might be piped with red or plaid material. The pattern is cut only in sizes 6, 8, 10 and 12 years. For making, size 8 years requires 21/2 yards 26-inch or 21/2 yards 44-inch material without up and down, with 1 yard applique and % yard 22-inch material for shaped band at the neck and the extensions of the skins of beets and not to cut their tops

CHILDREN'S DRESS

Children's fashions, as usual, follow at a little distance those of their elders. Thus they wear narrow skirts, but not so narrow as the adult styles, as children must have freedom of movement. The little ones, however, have adopted the empire line with the raised waist line, although the Krench bebe frock still continues popular.

Peasant or kimono sleeves share favor about equally with the regulation afterward. Thick pieces should be cut sleeves come just to the elbow and have fitted undersleeves of white lawn or batiste. Some of the sleeves are trimmed to match the bodice of the dress.

Little girls' coats are cut exactly on the lines of their mothers', says the Philadelphia North American. There are the side fastening and the sailor collar, while even the polo coat is shown in children's sizes. Among the best materials are serges, homespun and striped and checked worsteds.

Large hats and sailors are not neglected, however, and lingerie hats and fancy straw bonnets are being shown.

BRUSH" FEATHER

One of the latest novelties in the crys. tal and bead craze is a "brush" feather or aigrette fashioned out of spun glass so as to resemble in shape those flat feather dusters which continental housewives, especially Germans, use so much, says the Chicago Record-Herald. These glass aigrettes have not yet reached ordinary hats, but are seen on turbans and or evening coiffures.

BUTTON TRIMMING

Where buttons are used as a trimming on waists they are generally quite small and one can use almost any number of them. Sometimes they are covered with the dress material and sometimes with the silk or satin that trims it. Often they can be made to give just the right note of color relief to a wrist of black satin and chiffon or to other somber colors.-Delineator. .

AUCTION SALES

By GEORGE R. BUCKER, Auctioneer.

SALE OF HOUSEHOLD FURNISHINGS!

Personal Effects, Etc. OF THE Late Frederick E. Weeks

ON THE PREMISES 68 Griggs Road, Brookline

(Off Washington, pear Beacon street) TUESDAY, MARCH 28th

At 10 A. M., by order of the executrix.

This house is bequitively furnished with olid Mahogany and Antique Pieces, Fine slattings, Old Bine China, Bronses, Oristal Rugs, Solid Bilver, etc.

Paintings, Old Bine Chias Brouses, Orlintal Engs, Solid Bilver, etc.

I have known Mr. Weeks personally for several rears and as many of the things were purchased on my judgment at various sales, I have no heattation in saying that this is an unusual and highly interesting collection. There is a quantom-made solid mahogany dining-room solite; there are 2 mahogany bookeases filled with books, some of them complete sets of Shakespere, Thinkeray, Hugo, etc.; a grandfather's clock, and a Williard banjo clock; a very handsome Sheraton soft and a soft of the colonial type, a mahogany cased upright plano in good condition; also highboy, genuine old convex mirror (one of the best I have ever seen), an elaborately carved Florentine mirror in gold, and sweral colosial mirrors, a semarkable old ivory chalite (museum piece), solid silver teapot with Ispanese ornamentation, and other, good pieces of solid silver and plated ware, sevsrai choice bronnes, paintings by Enneking, Fenetti, Martorelli, DeBiois and others, and the usual assortment of bedroom, kitchen and other furniture; as the famlly will leave for California on Thursday everything is offered for absolute sale, and must be paid for and removed on Wednesdes, THE HOUSE WILL BE OPEN AT 9 O'CLOCK ON TUESDAY, and the sale will start promptly at 10. GEO, B, RUCKER, Auctioneer.

PRICES SLIGHTLY HIGHER BUT DUL

Handing Down of Decisions in Anti-Trust Cases Expected to Be Signal for Activity in Stocks.

LONDON IS QUIET

Fractionally higher prices were reorded by the leading stocks at the open ing of the New York market this morning. There was no urgent demand and the trading was of much the same order as that which has been noted for some time past during the early sales of the Professional operators will welcome the handing down of the anti-trust company decisions by the United States supreme court, and it makes little difference to them whether the opinions be for or against the corporations. It is urged that whatever the decisions may be the result will not deprive the corporations of doing business. It means simply that their methods of business may be altered if the decisions be adverse to the corporations. Consequently it is expected that greater activity in the market will immediately follow and business generally will improve

Atlantic Coast Line opened in New York 2 points lower than the previous selling price at 119 and then recovered point. People's Gas opened up 3/4 at 107 and improved fractionally. Laclede Gas sold ex-dividend at 1021/4 and held around that figure. Steel opened unchanged at 781/4 and advanced a fraction. Fractional improvement was made by Consolidated Gas, Canadian Pacific, Utah Copper and Missouri Pacific. United Fruit opened unchanged on the local market at 181 and advanced a point before midday. American Woolen opened at 35%, improved to 36 and then declined a good fraction. The preferred sold ex-dividend 1% at the opening at 92, compared with 94, Saturday's closing price. Old Dominion changed hands Beers closed 1/2 higher at 18%. Continental bourses were quiet.

THE SITUATION

BIRMINGHAM - The sales activity, which characterized the southern iron market during the latter portion of February, has toned off into a brisk inquiry, with little actual business booked. The figures of $11 for spots and $11.50 for ast half delivery are fairly maintained, but there is practically no last half busiaess being done.

Meanwhile the southern furnaces con-

UNITED STATES MOTOR COMPANY. NEW YORK-The United States Mo tor Company has placed an order for

The leading equipment companies, including American Car & Foundry have adjusted themselves to the disappoint ment of the rate situation with characteristic American optimism. It is realized that this decision came too late to make possible any decided buying movement for late spring, and that is will be midsummer at the earliest before the roads begin to order for fall requirements. American Car & Foundry has on hand at the moment orders for the next three months' production, based on the present rate of output, which may be placed at about 65 per cent to 70 per cent of normal. There are in the market inquiries for bewteen 6000 and 8000 cars and several big orders are being considered by certain roads which may materialize into business of first class importance. 1

American Car & Foundry will close its fiscal year the last of April. The year is expected to be at least as good as was the 1910 fiscal period, when $5,725,-098 of net profits for dividends and depreciation were realized, leaving a balance for the $30,000,000 common of 6.6 per cent. American Car & Foundry has had the great advantage this year of being able to carry over from the previous year a large volume of forward business. When the new year opened in May, 1910, the company had orders ahead sufficient to carry it into December and totaling in value over $50,000,000. here has been no period of general buying movement since and in some months, notably last fall, buying has been at times the smallest in the history of the equipment business. January and February, however, saw some fair-sized orders taken and a portion of this work will be billed in time to count in earnings of the current fiscal period.

MR. WOOD SAYS MILLS MAY CLOSE

LOS ANGELES, Cal.-Closing of every woolen mill in the country is predicted in the event of a reduction in the duties

"If Congress should pull down the tariff, or if the Democrats should even lower schedule K, it would force us to close down every woolen mill in the country and abandon our present plan of building a huge mill out here on the coast," says William M. Wood of Boston, president of the American Woolen Company,

BANKING SITUATION

CHICAGO-The open winter has been good for railroad operations, building and farm work, but bad for merchandising, and the coal trade. General business has continued steady but dull most of the time. The recent industrial improvement has hardly been sustained, so far as new orders are concerned. Railroads are giving more attention to ultimate economies than to immediate develop-

Traffic picked up a little recently owing o increased movement of agricultural roducts and the premature f spring activities in various directions Crop advices have been favorable, except the complaints of drought in the North west and sections of the Southwest.

Interest in the mayoralty election April 12 is keen. Revision of telephone, gas and electric light schedules will rest entirely in the hands of the new city council. Adjournment of the General Assembly at Springfield is near, without quarterly dividend of 1% per cent on its much constructive or harassing legisla tion having been enacted. Something tangible in the way of tax reform and public utility commission is expected. The railroads have been singularly free from attack, except at the hands of selfconstituted friends of labor. Their chief local concern is to hold back agitation for electrification until they can feel their way. They know electrification is inevitable. The general public seems unaware of the tremendous cost than where must finally lodge.

cent. Could a rate of growth of 10 or 12 per cent be maintained for the current year, it would mean a gross busiof very nearly $50,000,000 contrasted with $34,000,000, the first year of the company's formation. Another feature of National Biscuit is the very large percentage of package as contrasted with bulk gods which it produces. Not long after the corporation was formed the management discovered that the future of the company lay in the expansion of package good sales. Toper cent of its output to package goods and controls well over 90 per cent of the package goods business of the United States. Its opposition is so small relatively as to be inconsequential. It does make perhaps $10,000,000 yearly of "bulk' goods, but these are sold at an absurdly low margin of profit. National Biscuit has no large plant expansion on hand for the current fiscal year, such as was the case in 1910, when $1,400,000 was expended without issuance of any form of securities for building two big new plants. There is pressure for more manufacturing room in New York city, where the huge plants are running at full capacity. an interesting fact that the National Biscuit plants on Manhattan are the largest manufacturing establishment on the island and employ more persons

National Biscuit net profits will this year have the benefit of materially lower flour and other commodity prices. Lard, for instance, is 4 cents per pound cheaper than a year ago. Flour is 10 per cent less than a year ago. During 1910 National Biscuit bought large amounts of low-priced materials, but it had to use up its higher priced materials first, so that lower prices affected but a portion of the 12 months operations.

The company easily earned almost 10 per cent for its common last year. It is likely that profits for the $29,236,000 common this year will touch 12 per cent. Such an event, it is expected, would mean at least an 8 per cent rate for this stock.

Changing Municipal Government

IT CAN be said truthfully in a general way that commission government, so far as it has been tested, is justifying itself. Even when most imperfect, it is an improvement over the old system. While it greatly enlarges opportunity for radical and sometimes unwise experimentation in local administration, it affords opportunity for speedy correction of errors. In California, where a large measure of discretion is granted to municipalities in the matter of charter amendment, experiments are being made which tend toward public ownership on an extensive scale. This is true of Los Angeles in particular, where the way has been opened by the referendum for the municipal operation of all kinds of public utilities. In undertaking to manage enterprises that have heretofore required the attention of efficiently officered private corporations, Los Angeles, of course, will assume a great responsibility; but the country and the world will hardly discourage that energetic and progressive community merely because risk accompanies the undertaking. Rather will the country and the world await the result with great and sympathetic interest.

People of towns and cities have long desired the privilege of conducting their communities in their own way. It is not yet the wisest plan to grant absolute home rule to all places. There are conditions in many of the great centers of population which make it necessary that the state shall exercise a measure of jurisdiction, a measure of restraint, over the local authority; but of late the home rule principle has been extended to many towns and cities in the different states, and the tendency is in this direction. Some of these communities, after trying new methods of government for a time, have found them defective in certain particulars and are now striving to correct them. We find an example of this in the case of Grand Rapids, Mich. It is now looking toward an improvement upon the commission system. It proposes to do away, as much as possible, with elective offices. With a mayor and three assistants, a comptroller, attorney and clerk, it is felt that the municipality can be managed better than if it had to carry a regiment of local officials. It will have a board of aldermen, however, and here is the point wherein it will differ from the commission idea.

But details in any case are secondary to the point that, so far as enabling legislative acts or liberal interpretation of statutes have permitted, communities are struggling to improve their local government. In those instances where there is apparent failure there should be no harsh criticism or hasty judgment. Out of all the seeming unrest and confusion there seems sure to emerge a clearer and a more exalted sense of individual responsibility for better municipal rule.

Talking for thousands of miles by means of a wireless telephone system sounds like an attractive proposition. In case the New York inventor who claims to have made that discovery succeeds in having it generally adopted, it might be well to provide that the subscribers should not all talk at once.

Panama Canal and the Railroads It is just as well that the public shall be made acquainted with the nature of the controversy that has arisen between the administration and the transcontinental railroad companies with regard to the rates to be charged against vessels for the privilege of passing through the Panama canal when that great waterway shall be ready for business. Although the formal opening of the canal will not take place until January, 1915, the first day of September, 1913, has been agreed upon as that upon which the first merchantman shall pass through from ocean to ocean. This is still a considerable distance ahead, but it is none too early for the fixing of the rates and all other regulations necessary to the efficient conduct of business in the zone.

The international navigation congress, which meets in London next June, informed Colonel Goethals some time since that eighteen months' notice of the opening of the canal to commerce is requisite in order that rates and contracts between foreign ocean-going ships and shippers might be adjusted in time to take immediate advantage of the new route. Hence the chief engineer of the canal urged that the rates be fixed by the last session of Congress. The transcontinental railroads, however, opposed the terms upon which it was proposed to fix them and nothing was done. This postponement of action has been regarded as a victory of the railroads over the President, who is set against granting vessels owned or operated by the railroads any favors likely to enable them to compete, at an advantage, with independent American shipping. In order that the transcontinental railroads may not be able to fasten their grip upon the business of the canal, the arrangement favored by the administration is one that grants to independent vessels favors which will be absolutely denied to shipping controlled by the transcontinental railways. In other words, the administration plan is to fix tolls that will make it impossible for the railroads to operate lines of vessels through

The railroads have set up several pleas against this treatment, but to no avail beyond the fact that they have thus far succeeded in deferring final action upon rates. One of their strongest contentions is to the effect that the government in this instance is striving to encourage the very form of discrimination which, when practised by the transportation companies, is regarded as an unlawful proceeding. To this and to similar contentions the administration replies that its policy with reference to the railroads and the canal is not intended to be restrictive so much as protective. The railroads intimate that the independent vessels may not be able to obtain rates to points of connection as favorable as those which shipping under their control would enjoy, and the administration replies that the interstate commerce commission is competent to look after that phase of the

Every precaution should be taken to prevent the Panama canal from falling under the domination of monopoly. Every precaution should be taken to prevent the canal from being used to the disadvantage of independent shipping. The hope of the country is that the opening of the canal may lead to the upbuilding of the merchant marine. It is not necessary to the accomplishment of any good purpose in the interest of shipping that the railroads should be treated unfairly in their legitimate pursuit of business. They must not complain, on the other hand, if in relation to the Panama canal and other waterway projects they are the subject of doubt. I Their course in this respect has hardly been such as to win confidence. Rather than to antagonize water transportation they might, far better, cooperate in the schemes for improving it.

WITH the Boston & Maine preparing to construct car shops to cost $3,000,000 at North Billerica, here is one instance where railroad retrenchment did not come with the decision of the interstate commerce commission.

Make Drama

Constructive

Now that an official censorship of plays apparently is to be maintained in Boston, the authorities should be assured of the collaboration of all organizations which may strongly influence the theater-going public. A stand like the one taken by Mayor Fitzgerald in barring from presentation here a drama that conveys debatable impressions will have slight permanent effect unless all theatrical productions in Boston are carefully scrutinized, and ruled out when found to be unwholesome. It is important, therefore, that this matter should be taken up, discussed and acted upon by clubs and societies with the idea of causing the members and all with whom they come in contact to discriminate in favor of the play that accomplishes good. Surrounding with the guise of artistic merit the counterfeit representations of baser phases of human life is exploiting what, deprived of its illusive glamour, would prove unattractive.

At this time, when followers of the drama all over the country are pondering the merits of Mayor Fitzgerald's action, it is enlightening to note that influential men here already are giving earnest thought to ways and means of informing theatergoers how to separate the wheat from the chaff. In such a work organization might readily become a powerful factor. The stage is one of the strongest influences in modern life. It is helpful or otherwise according as the standard of plays is raised or lowered. Those who are responsible for dramatic direction have a duty to perform that they cannot rightfully ignore. The editor of a responsible newspaper bars from its columns items and stories that some persons would read with fervid interest, but from which he knows the public at large should be protected. Why should not the conscientious owner of a theater be equally careful about the plays for which his house solicits patronage?

There is an element of public responsibility in the conduct of a theater. The unwholesome play panders to a false taste that should be corrected and not encouraged. Here in Boston there may be started a world-wide movement to make the stage constructive. It is of little avail to establish a censorship that may eventually result in making theatrical productions uninteresting. Tearing down is of no use without building up. In place of what is taken away something must be supplied if results are to be wholly satisfactory. The censorship, to maintain which the mayor apparently is clothed with ample authority, should be fortified with the work of various organizations to keep the drama clean. On the stage, as elsewhere, for the removal of darkness it is only necessary to let in the light.

PELTING the crowds with flowers flung from aeroplanes may yet become a Mardi Gras feature, but how under the sun will the merrymakers below respond?

Platinum and Gold A DESPATCH from Chicago, which city has become one of the world's important jewelry manufacturing centers, brings the news that platinum is to be pressed forward in preference to gold in the fabrication of fashionable ornaments for personal wear. The National Wholesale Jewelers Association, so it is stated, has actually decreed the employment of the more precious metal hereafter in the arts over which that body exercises considerable jurisdiction. Heretofore, it appears, platinum has been used chiefly for expensive diamond settings; henceforth it is to be used in all kinds of smaller articles, such as stickpins and studs for men, and earrings, brooches, rings, chains and bracelets for women. Platinum is so much higher than gold—the retail price ranging from $52 to $60 an ounce—that it is calculated by the manufacturing jewelers to be quite beyond the reach of ordinary people and, therefore, more desirable in the fashionable trade.

If there was enough platinum to go around it is not improbable that sooner or later the metal would find its way into the coinage system of nations. Silver, as everybody knows, has been greatly cheapened by increased production in recent years. Should platinum of the highest degree of fineness be made the standard of value, it would probably be found that gold is slowly going the way of silver. Measured by its purchasing power, we know already that gold is not worth as much as it was a few years ago.

But gold is not to be superseded to any great extent, even in the fine arts, for many years to come, if any other metal shall ever take its place. Alarmists will have it at times that the constant discovery of new gold fields and the constant discovery of new processes in mining, smelting and refining are tending to flood the world with the metal and to cheapen it. But the world is at the same time increasing its consumption of gold, not only in coinage and as a reserve basis for currency circulation but in the fine and mechanical arts.

There is no reason why platinum should not be exploited as a material for the manufacture of fashionable jewelry. On the other hand, there is no reason for thinking that gold will become within our time so unfashionable for any purpose as to bear the mark of cheapness.

Transplanting a fifteen-ton elm tree in these days is approached as an ordinary task. Not many years ago it would have been much like moving a mountain.

WE Now have German professors talking by wireless underground. Sub terra, it seems, might easily become sub rosa.

Congressmen and senators may almost be heard counting the days when it means settling down to business once more.

These are those who may question the full wisdom of allowing the United States to become a colonial power, but there can be no two opinions that in every instance where the flag of this country has been raised over a newly acquired territory the people have been benefited educationally. A striking illustration is furnished by Porto Rico. In he few years that the American government has been in control, the public school system has been improved to such a degree that world-educators are astonished at the change that has taken place in the native population. The work accomplished by Edwin D. Dexter, commissioner of education of Porto Rico, and those associated with him, is a telling evidence that the Latin-American furnishes the best material from which to mold a citizen of the country to which he owes allegiance.

Magnificent as is the scenery of the island, and excellent as are the macadamized roads, what strikes the recent visitor to Porto Rico most forcibly is the public school houses, which, to the number of more than 1000, are encountered everywhere. It is true that some of these structures are extremely simple. Some may be thatchroofed. But large or small, the schools had an attendance during the school year of 1909-10 of 121,453. This means that with the exception of the United States and Canada no other people of the western hemisphere furnished as large a percentage of children for the purpose of education.

It is interesting to be told that the rural schools are not only the most numerous but that in the country districts the effect of consistent schooling has been the more pronounced. This does not mean, of course, that in cities like San Juan, Ponce and Mayaguez, with their first-class high schools, the work has been less satisfactory. Graduates of these schools enter the University of Porto Rico well equipped for advanced studies and the agricultural department at the highest institution of learning in the island has an attendance so large as to bear witness that the soil is a decided drawing card.

While the University of Porto Rico is not exactly under the department of education, the commissioner is ex-officio president and chancellor. The university owns 200 acres of land, and at Rio Piedras nine buildings have so far been crected. The faculty is selected with care, and as the salaries of the teachers at the university, as well as at the lower schools, are considerably higher than are the average salaries paid to teachers in the United States, the department of education has been able to draw on a highly efficient class of instructors.

That not only the mass of the children are being instructed in the Porto Rican schools is shown by the large adult attendance at the night schools, which are held in 158 buildings. It is, therefore, hardly necessary to comment further on the benefit which has come to the island through the American occupation. With a substantial foundation on which to rest the future political structure of the place, there can be little doubt that in Porto Rico the United States is working out a problem which carries a lesson of importance with reference to the colonial policy of the government in the Philippines. It is perhaps true that the proximity of Porto Rico to this country makes it less difficult to supervise the school progress there. At the same time, it is evident that it pays to be liberal with educational appropriations. The stars and stripes can hardly be associated with a more honorable public policy than that of good schools.

THE overcrowded thoroughfare is, of course, one of the natural consequences of urban congestion. The impulse that directs the stream of humanity toward the crowded city directs it also toward the crowded quarter of the city and the crowded street. "Going with the crowd" is not a saying of yesterday. The tendency of man is to mass. This has been the case among all civilized peoples through all the time of which we have record.

Another for Elevated Sidewalks

It is a tendency that has its commendable as well as its objectionable features. Where it makes for unity of purpose and action, for material and moral advancement, for social and intellectual intercourse, it is a tendency to be encouraged; where it degenerates into mere congestion, brings forward a surging, heedless crowd, and develops the characteristics suggested by such terms as swarm, pack and herd, it is a tendency that calls for a check.

So great are the throngs in some of the principal cities of the country, or, rather, in their restricted business areas, that the relief sought in "double deck" and "triple deck" streets has proved to be only temporary. There are thoroughfares in New York, Boston and Chicago today more difficult of passage for pedestrians than they were before the introduction of subways, elevated railroads and other improved methods of transportation. The elevated railroads, subways and other transportation improvements have served to promote rather than to relieve congestion. They have accentuated business centers. They have centralized shopping. They have made for concentration, and they are making for it today, when dispersion is really the movement desired in the interest of public comfort and genuine civic progress.

Again comes the proposition—this time from New York—that congestion in the crowded business centers of metropolitan cities be relieved by elevated sidewalks. This means, of course, another level to the streets of the shopping centers. To be of any real value, the elevated sidewalk must connect with the buildings. Should this be the case, a new line of store fronts, a new line of display windows, would soon face the second street-level. There would probably be relief on the street level proper for a time. It would not be long, however, until another and a higher elevated sidewalk would be demanded, and to meet the new conditions there would have to be new construction, the architects being compelled to provide shop lines for as many stories as might be made necessary by the increasing tiers of elevated sidewalks.

Manifestly no permanent improvement of the situation is promised here. There can be little benefit until popular thought shall be educated out of the idea of centralization. The quickest way of bringing about the desired change would be through the creation of secondary business districts. This is in line with the civic center movement that has found a foothold in some of the smaller communities. With regard to the metropolitan cities of the United States, there must at an early day be a breaking away from the restricted areas to which their retail and office business is now confined. The movement which has been inward for years will have to become outward if trade is to have elbow room.
